Using the Pacing Guide

This Pacing Guide lays out the pre-assigned modules, practice sets, and exams that will get you ready for Exam Day. But the best Study Plan is one that you customize to your personal study needs. Learning science shows that returning to material you've recently learned reinforces your memory and understanding. Use the third column of the table to plan out how many additional Qbank questions to add throughout your studies to get extra practice on the topics from each preceding curriculum block. Then use your Analytics page to identify your areas of weakness and customize your extra Practice Sets on the material that will give you the biggest boost to

Practice Sets

Mastering the LSAT is all about gaining experience and developing skill. Building an intuitive foundation first is the best way to tackle questions on test day. To that end, we offer students practice within the pre-work modules, exams, pre-made practice sets, and customizable practice sets in QBank.

Learning Modules

The most effective practice begins with a strong foundation of understanding. Your Study Plan assigns you modules to teach you the core concepts and strategies you'll need for the upcoming Practice Sets. Each module contains video instruction by our LSAT experts that break each concept on the LSAT down into understandable, digestible chunks.

But it's not just video; small quizzes are mixed in throughout the modules to ensure your understanding along the way. Always make sure you have covered the preceding modules before tackling the Practice Sets to solidify your understanding of the new material.

This table mirrors the order of the modules in your Personalized Study Plan. You can double-check that you've completed all the modules for a Practice Set on the Resources page of your Blueprint LSAT account (lsat.blueprintprep. com/resources/ modules), which lists the modules in numerical

Practice Exams

Although you will start your course with a diagnostic exam & take another about one-third of the way through, most of the 10 practice exams you complete should be done later in the course, since you'll need lots of untimed practice first to build a foundation necessary for LSAT success.

Help Center

Our goal is to help you score as high as you possibly can on the LSAT, and we hope (and sincerely believe) that this Pacing Guide will be a big help in reaching that goal. But we want to make sure you have all of your questions answered. Check out our Help Center (help.blueprintprep.com), located in the bottom-right corner of your account page when you log in. There, you can find in-depth articles covering everything about the LSAT, your course, and anything else you can think of.
